

Social Welfare and Healthcare Systems: A Patient's Guide in Japan

Niigata University Medical and Dental Hospital
The 9th Edition, Revised in August 2023

Introduction

These “Social Welfare and Healthcare Systems: A Patient’s Guide in Japan” describe social welfare and healthcare systems for alleviating burden on HIV patients when they consult physicians at medical institutions and lead their daily lives.

There are various social welfare and healthcare systems in Japan, which may confuse you when trying to understand how they work or how you may use them. We have therefore compiled the Guidelines to facilitate your understanding.

Please note that, however, you may not use all of the Systems described here.

Besides, you are not obliged to use a System in any case. However, we hope that the Guidelines will create better environments for each one of you to live with various diseases.

If you want to know the details about a System you want to use, or you do not know how to use it, please feel free to consult with contact persons for the System or social workers at relevant medical institutions.

Subsidies are given to people aged 18 or older having a physical disability certificate, or those aged under 18 with physical disabilities, who receive treatments to remove or reduce such disabilities.

→ Eligibility

As for HIV patients, only treatments related to HIV infection, such as anti-HIV therapies, immunomodulation, complication prevention and treatment, are targeted.

→ Patients' out-of-pocket money

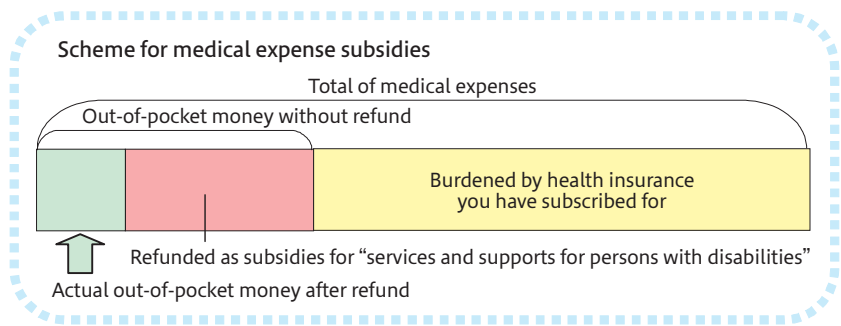

- In principle, patients are required to pay 10% of the total expenses. However, according to their household income (of family members subscribing for the same health insurance), the upper limit of out-of-pocket money per month is applied.
- Furthermore, those with immune disorders are classified as “severe patients requiring continuous support” and the upper limit of out-of-pocket money is applied regardless of their income. (See the table on the next page.)
- Meal costs during hospitalization (standard amount) are totally shouldered by patients, in general.

TOPIC

Getting employment

Many people, including those who are working, or thinking about getting or changing jobs, worry about their employment, if they suffer diseases: whether they should disclose their disease to their workplace, or how to secure their time for hospital visits during working.

Sometimes you may be able to solve these issues or alleviate burden by consulting with government's contacts, such as Hello Works (employment service centers) and vocational centers for persons with disabilities, as well as medical institutions you visit, patient/patient advocacy groups, and offices supporting the employment of persons with disabilities.

Another solution may be that you provide your workplace with information on HIV, its symptoms and support you need, with the help of medical institutions.

If you have obtained a physical disability certificate (PDC), you can get a job using the disabled person quota system. For fiscal year 2023, the quota system demands that 2.3% of all employees at private firms of certain scale should be disabled persons, 2.6% at national and public organizations, and 2.5% at prefectural boards of education. Although gradually, the employment of those infected with HIV using the quota system is also increasing.
